Forrest Bess, hermaphroditic visionary, spent twenty years of his life living on an island, amking crepuscular, talisman-like paintings away from the world. Joan Snyder seemingly discovered image-making by accident—she took an elective art class during her last year of college as a sociology major, changing the course of her life. Magic, marvelousness, the logic of chance—these artists, paired together at Franklin Parrasch, create an otherworldly dialogue, right before your eyes.
