A show about the television of the Eastern Bloc and another that celebrates the work of a San Francisco gallery. Here are six exhibitions and events to check out in the coming week. [...]

“Dilexi: Totems and Phenomenology,” at Parrasch Heijnen. Early in June, Parker Gallery kicked off a series of exhibitions in locations around California devoted to the artists of San Francisco’s Dilexi Gallery. Dilexi focused on counterculture artists whose work channeled an uncommon spirituality and who often employed ethereal or nontraditional materials. As part of this, Parrasch Heijnen is showing pieces by Arlo Acton, Deborah Remington, Charles Ross, Richard Van Buren and Tony DeLap (who died this month), artists whose work touched on environmental qualities and the nature of perception. Opens Saturday at 4 p.m. and runs through Aug. 10. 1326 S. Boyle Ave., Boyle Heights, Los Angeles, parraschheijnen.com.

"Broken Pyramid," 1966 by Charles Ross. (Charles Ross / Parrasch Heijnen)

“Dilexi Gallery: Disparate Ontologies,” at the Landing. Also part of the Dilexi series is this exhibition at the Landing, which features an array of artists who exhibited at the gallery, including John Altoon, Joe Goode, Leslie Kerr and H.C. Westermann. Though the artists who exhibited at Dilexi occupied the avant-garde, their styles were wildly different — working in sculpture, painting, installation and happenings. Opens Saturday at 6 p.m. and runs through Aug. 10. 5118 W. Jefferson Blvd., West Adams, Los Angeles, thelandinggalleries.com.

“Dilexi Gallery: Seeking the Unknown,” at Parker Gallery. This exhibition is one of a six-part retrospective — staged at galleries around L.A. and San Francisco — that will examine the legacy of San Francisco’s Dilexi Gallery, a space where art intersected with the magical. Artists in this show at the Parker include Wallace Berman, Kurt Schwitters, Roy De Forest and Franklin Williams. Other participating galleries include Parrasch Heijnen, the Landing and Marc Selwyn Fine Arts, whose shows are opening at separate dates. Through Aug. 10. 2441 Glendower Ave., Los Feliz, Los Angeles, parkergalleries.com.
